

MOKENA M. E. CHURCH 70 YEARS OLD

3 Special Anniversary Services, Sunday To Mark Historical Event

For 70 years the Methodist church at Mokena has been proclaiming the Gospel and on December 5th this church will celebrate its 70th anniversary. The church has weathered thru many hard times during these years of service and as of service, it is pointing to a new realization, a realization that the Methodist church is performing a service to the community.

History Of The Mokena M. E. Church. There are a very few historical records to be found concerning the history of this church. The first record noted in the journal of 1866 of the Rock River Conference, at which time Wm. E. Stewart, the Presiding Elder of the Joliet District, shows the appointment of the Rev. Mr. A. B. Salisbury to Mokena. Prior to the building of this church, the people worshipped in the school house.

Some years ago the Editor of The News-Bulletin, found the only available bit of history on the dedication of the church. He discovered that a marble slab on an old mahogany table in the church was about to fall and in putting back the slab, he noticed the following inscription on the under side, written in old fashioned script:

"This church was dedicated on the 18th day of December 1867. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Kidder of Evanston, Illinois. The pastor of the church was Rev. L. Haskins, Presiding Elder of the District."

1868 is the first statistical record for Mokena, that record would of course be for the conference year in which the dedication of the church occurred. 1871 is the first year's record which shows a parsonage and it continues to be recorded until 1899. The property then was sold.

From the year 1923 until the present time, Mokena has been served by a student pastor, appointed to this charge only.

From the year 1868 to the present date, 34 pastors have served this church, some of whom also served other churches, they being: Tinley Park, Frankfort, and Trinity M. E., in Joliet.

Do Your Xmas Mailing Early The postmasters of this territory are asking for the cooperation of the public in the matter of Christmas mail. During the holiday time the volume of mail increases approximately 200 percent. It is a physical impossibility to handle this great mass of mail matter efficiently and promptly within a few days. Articles easily broken or crushed must be securely packed and crated or boxed. Use liberal quantities of excelsior, or like material around and between the articles and the outside container. Glassware, fragile toys, or crockery must be packed so as to prevent the escape of particles or pieces if broken in transit.

Big WLS Home Talent Show At Tinley Next Week

The Prairie Farmer WLS Community Talent show which is being sponsored by the Ladies Aid of the German St. L. church will be given three nights December 9, 10, 11 at Tinley Park in the school.

This show is patterned after the Prairie Farmer WLS National broadcast program as given in Chicago each Saturday night in the old street theatre, and is featured by impersonations of your favorite radio stars together with many new and original acts.

Recently several of our Home Talent toiks were featured on the Alka Seltzer program at the 8th street theatre in impersonations of Louis Belle, Uncle Ezra, the Arkansas Woodchopper, the Maple City four, Verne, Lee and Mary, and the Hoosier Hot Shots. These people received a great deal of praise for their clever work, and letters were received from many different states complimenting them on their fine impersonations. These folks were selected from several thousand, who have taken part in our Prairie Farmer WLS Home Talent shows, and in each community there are many others possessed of great talent who love these radio characters and enjoy the opportunity for self-expression in impersonating them.

You will enjoy seeing your own talented sons and daughters exhibit good showmanship. Under the skillful training of the WLS Community Service Directors, the whole cast learns to put the pep, the spirit and the sincerity into their acting which is so needed in Home Talent productions.

In every community there are people of genuine ability who if they had a chance would be as good on the radio as many of the real stars. And the enjoyment that comes to the audience is as great and even more so, than if they were listening to the original artists in person.

With a new year almost upon us it is well to take stock in what we have accomplished as a club. Undoubtedly many have noticed the work the Garden club has done in regard to the improvement of the corner of Front st. and Wolf Rd. as well as the highways.

Under the supervision of Mrs. Walter Yunker chairman of the Civic Work, 55 bushes were planted on the school property, the work being finished this week. We want to thank Mrs. Schweser, Mrs. Geo. Rinke, Mrs. Mall and Mrs. E. Cooper for the bushes they donated.

We are proud to say that no matter how large or small our tasks were this year we have had the best co-operation from the town than ever before. We wish also to thank those who so generously donated time as well as material to aid in our community work. Without this we could never have accomplished the many tasks planned.

Mrs. Albert Brown reports from the Chicago Plant and Flower Guild that 60 boxes of flowers and 48 bouquets were received from our club.

Two new members joined at the last meeting making five new members for the year. Members who are collecting books, playing cards toys etc. may bring these to the next meeting or no later than Dec. 17. SYNOPSIS

Joyce Sewell, on the eve of her twentieth birthday, rebels at her lot, dependent on her detested stepmother, Irma, and full of tragic memories of her mother's murder twelve years before and her father's death six months ago. Irma calls in Helm Blackadder, an admirer, to help her persuade Joyce to marry rich, young Michael Kirkpatrick. Mike, sent up to Joyce by Irma and Blackadder, demands a showdown on his proposal and is rejected. Reading her father's papers, Joyce realizes that La Barranca, a Mexican hacienda which her father had owned, legally belongs to her. Later, she receives a letter enclosing a warrant on the United States Treasury for $10,000 compensation for her mother's murder at La Barranca. She confers with Mr. Bradley, a banker and only remaining friend of her father's. She confides that she wants to make a secret journey to Mexico.

She sat staring at the floor, not answering at once. "I know what you mean," she said finally, "and I'll try to explain. I remember everything, but I've found out that being far away from a thing like that doesn't help you to forget—it makes it into a picture on the wall. Then there's something else. Places go by contrasts, don't they? I won't say anything about Elsinboro; all I can tell you is that when I've been unhappy, when I'm most miserable, I look back and dream of happiness and La Barranca." She swept her eyes to his face. "My mother isn't here, Mr. Bradley. I mean she couldn't possibly come to Elsinboro—not even in my thoughts. Does that sound foolish to you?"

"Not foolish, my dear," he murmured, "not at all foolish."

Touched by his understanding she reached out one hand impulsively and laid it on his arm. "Oh, Mr. Bradley, please be my friend. You can help me so much! My passport, a letter of credit, but that's not all. You know my stepmother. Father used to keep telling me she's a good woman. Well, she is, but if she finds out what I'm doing or where I am I'll have two fights on my hands instead of one."

"How are you going to work it? How will you get away?"

"I've thought it all out. I can say I'm going to Frances Holder's for a visit."

"H'm. But they'll trace you. Nowadays a deliberate disappearance is one of the hardest things on earth to stage."

"I've thought of that too." She gave him a look so composed it set his blood to tingling. "If I go by air, where will I be by the time they begin their tracing?"

He blinked at her admiringly. "Joyce, I've made up my mind. I'll do everything I can to help you and I promise I'll keep my mouth tight shut till you say the word."

On the same impulse they rose to their feet and stood with right hands half extended, not quite touching. "You're awfully young, Joyce, and most people would say I ought to be jailed for letting you go. But you've got heart as well as head, and as for youth—what's it for? To spend while it's strong."

He proved as good as his word and better, for he could see a lot further ahead than Joyce. Within ten days not only did he arrange that her passport for travel abroad should come direct from the State department rather than through the local county clerk, but he coached her on her department in the meantime toward her stepmother, provided her with a certified copy of her father's will, warned her about excessive baggage and bought her tickets by air in a fictitious name.

Later, without detection, she boarded a plane at Elsinboro's almost deserted airport that connected at Newark with a night plane south.

CHAPTER III

Dirk Van Suttart, second secretary of embassy, would have showed to greater advantage in any other setting. The traditions of an ancient name were behind him, he had more than his share of good looks, a reasonable amount of money and a merry eye. Away from his job he was as clean-cut a young American as ever drew breath, but he was on the way to being spoiled, poisoned by the bite of the diplomatic bee.

He was engaged in testing the spring of a polo mallet when the reception clerk entered, laid Joyce's slip on the desk and lingered to smoke a cigarette. Dirk read the paper over his shoulder.

"What does she want?"

"Same old thing. She'd like to walk in on the chief."

Dirk finished testing the stick, put it away in a clothes closet, went to his padded chair and rummaged for a dispatch. "All set. You can show her in." Presently Joyce stood before him. He perused the dispatch frowningly for a moment longer, then motioned her to a chair beside the desk.

"Won't you sit down, Miss Sewell?"

Joyce hesitated. "You're not the ambassador, are you?"

"Hardly. I'm the second secretary."

"I wanted to see the ambassador."

"Are you an American?"

"Yes; born of American parents residing abroad. I arrived from the States last night. Do you wish to see my passport?"

"That's not necessary at present. I suggest you state your business. If it's something I can't handle—or if it's important enough—an appointment will be made for you with his excellency."

Joyce sat down without taking her eyes off him. She was puzzled. Here was a young man, the very antithesis of Mike Kirkpatrick in looks, manner and breeding, yet all she felt was bitter disappointment. Why? Suddenly the answer swept over her. She was face to face with the mask that had defeated her father—immature, perhaps, its veneer not yet solidified, but the same unfeeling mask.

"What's your name?" she asked.

"Dirk Van Suttart," he replied, betrayed by the suddenness of the question. A glint lit in his eye and color rose to his cheeks, but he quickly controlled his anger and raised one eyebrow. "Really, Miss Sewell, while you requested a personal interview I didn't realize you were contemplating an exchange of confidences."

"I like to know to whom I am talking," said Joyce coolly. "I think you'll find my business is quite personal. I'm the daughter and sole heir of the late Cutler Sewell and there's a file in this office under his name. I wish to know my rights. Am I entitled to have copies of the dispatches, or to examine them, or to be given a resume, or—if all that is impossible—can I be informed of the last step in the negotiation?"

By this time both Van Suttart's eyebrows were raised to the limit. "No copy of any dispatch can be given to anybody," he declared, "except by specific direction of the Department of State, and the same restriction applies to the balance of your question. May I ask to what this file refers?"

"To my father's property in this country."

"I thought so. Miss Sewell, Americans abroad suffer from an unfortunate delusion which you seem to share that the foreign service is maintained for their individual convenience. It isn't. It was created for the benefit of the United States as a whole and of the taxpayers at home who foot the bills. Haven't you heard of the Mexican claims commission in Washington?"

"I have."

"That, my dear young lady, is where you should file your petition."

"I did, through my father, when I was eight years old. I'm not eight now, Mr. Van Suttart, though you seem to think so. The Mexican claims commission has been sitting for a great many years considering claims amounting to $250,000,000. Has it settled a single case?"

"I'm not at liberty to say."

"You mean you don't know? I'll tell you, it hasn't—no one."

"Miss Sewell, this conversation is getting us nowhere. May I say in conclusion that I've given you all the advice—the only advice—to which you are entitled? The embassy can do nothing to help you—nothing whatever."

"Help!" exclaimed Joyce. "I didn't come here for help; I asked for certain information. Are you sure you have the authority to refuse it?"

"Quite sure."

Joyce stood up to find her knees were trembling. She had been dismissed, told to leave! Anger surged in her veins—anger against some implacable force outside herself and Van Suttart. She became a flame and suddenly its beauty cut through to his inner consciousness. In a half daze he was telling himself that if he had met this girl at a cocktail party instead of in the course of official business he would have crashed through to her side and stayed there. But he was too late, the polished shell he wore had held out too long.

"Mr. Van Suttart," said Joyce, "your imagining I came to you for help has its funny side. Aren't you ever puzzled as to why you're alive—why you draw down pay? A canary in his gilded cage earns his keep with song, but a popinjay can't even sing."

She was gone before he could wipe the look of amazement from his face, much less answer.

She hurried to the hotel where she was living, paid her bill and asked that her baggage be brought down. At sight of the petaca there were supercilious glances from the tourists, the clerk and even the porter, but not from the taxi driver; again the little native trunk grieved her well. He did not bother to lie about the fare and even understood her quest for the best hotel unfrequented by foreigners. Unhesitatingly he drove her to an establishment in a back street but near the center of town. The proprietor greeted her in soft Castilian and took the trouble to accompany her himself to a top-floor room.

"Can you recommend a woman lawyer?" she asked.

"I know of one, but she's a Mexican."

"I prefer a Mexican," said Joyce. "Will you give me her name and address?"

He took out his card, scribbled on it, and handed it to her. "She's a difficult person," he remarked, "but an excellent lawyer."

Joyce decided to waste no time in telephoning for an appointment, but she did stop long enough to unpack her bag and hang up her clothes. As her rage at Van Suttart began to cool she wondered at it and felt a little ashamed. Probably that manner of his had got him his job, perhaps he was paid to make people feel exactly as she had felt. She opened the petaca, sorted out the documents she thought she would need and made her way on foot to the lawyer's address. It was a strange, old-fashioned building with a long dark narrow hall which opened suddenly upon a big square well surrounded by balconies and roofed by the sky. There was an elevator but no attendant. Rather than attempt to work the mechanism herself she walked up two flights and located a door upon which was inscribed: Lic. Margarida Fonseca.

She knocked; there was no answer. She opened the door, stepped into an empty anteroom and coughed. The door into a room beyond was open. She passed through it and stopped short. On the farther side of a littered desk, leaning back and apparently absorbed in staring through the thick wall at some vision far away, sat a woman whose appearance could be described only as leonine. One glance was enough to make her speak in English.

"What do you want?"

"A lawyer," said Joyce.

"What for? What about?"

"May I sit down?"

"No! What about?"

"An estate."

"Whose?"

"Mine. I have the documents here proving absolute title if you'll only take the trouble to look at them."

"No use. You're wasting my time. Don't waste yours or your money by going to any other lawyer. I give you that advice for nothing."

"What is your time worth?" asked Joyce, switching into Spanish. "I like you. How much would you charge to let me sit and look at you for half an hour?"

Model Hayloft Is Placed in U. S. Farm Building; Seek to Standardize Crops

The most modern farm laboratory in the world has been opened by the Department of Agriculture in Washington in an effort to raise the standards of American farm products, writes a Washington United Press correspondent in the New York Herald Tribune.

In the new standardization building are located the bureaus directing regulatory and marketing agencies dealing with the principal farm products. Technological and economic research scientists also are housed in the air-cooled structure.

It also houses a modern hayloft—a combination standardization research laboratory and warehouse—with glass north front and scientific devices for analyzing quality and factors in hay.

Cotton experts prepare standards for use in domestic and foreign trade. The appeal board of review examiners, the final authority in the interpretation of standards, has its classing rooms in the building.

Along with cotton standardization and classical work, the physical Margarida Fonseca swung around in her swivel chair, planted her elbows on the desk, her fists in her cheeks, and stared. "Cara'ol! Hablas Castillano, gringuita! So, we talk Spanish! Who are you?"

"My name is Joyce Sewell. I'm the daughter of Cutler Sewell who owned—"

"Tst! Tst! Nobody owns anything. You possess, you don't own."

"Oh, but I do," protested Joyce. "I can prove it." She advanced, sat down on the edge of a chair and laid her documents on the desk. "Please let me show you."

"It's no use, my child. I've told you the truth and the whole truth. Incidentally I don't like Americans, but let me give you something else for nothing. Get out. Go back to your own country before somebody makes one bite of your pretty head."

Joyce stood up and buried her grave blue eyes in Margarida's black ones. "I'll get out, but I won't go back. I was wrong about you. I may not find a lawyer with more brains, but I'll get one who isn't a coward." She snatched up her precious documents, turned quickly and started toward the door.

"Stop!" yelled Margarida. "Nobody can say that to me! Come back and sit down. Give me the papers." She took them, spread them out but kept her puzzled eyes fixed on Joyce. Abruptly she smiled. "I thought you were out to make a play on the tender female heart but I've changed my mind. Have you any money?"

"How much?"

"Ten thousand dollars."

"Really! You're loose in Mexico at your age with $10,000! We'll see the papers."

She glanced over them swiftly with odd jerks of her nose as if she were a parrot tearing the meat out of one nut after another.

"Why didn't you tell me it was La Barranca?" she asked of the blue sky.

"You didn't give me a chance," said Joyce.

Margarida turned. "I think I've found a way. It has nothing whatever to do with the courts. Come back in a week."

"That won't do," said Joyce, "it won't do at all!"

"Why not?"

"Because a week is too long!"

"You have courage, little one. Since you don't do your fighting with tears we'll go hunting together. Fortunately I care nothing what happens to you—nothing at all. Is that clearly understood?"

"Don't worry," said Joyce. "Show me the road and I'll look out for myself."

Margarida scooped up the papers, crammed a hat on her head, showed the way out and slammed the door behind them. A moment later they were in a taxi which scurried along interminable back streets to draw up in exactly 15 minutes at the residence of Gen. Zacharias Onelia, right-hand man to the minister of war.

"General, it is very good of you to receive us," said Margarida. "Do you mind taking a look at this young lady before she goes out to walk around the patio while you and I have a talk? She has a peculiar value, General."

"To me?"

"Especially to you," said Margarida and turned to Joyce. "Suppose you go out, chica, and stay out till you're called!" As soon as Joyce had gone Margarida leaned toward Onelia and continued in a low voice. "General, this is a momentous business, far deeper than may appear at first glance. The young lady, Miss Joyce Sewell, is undoubtedly the lawful owner of hacienda La Barranca."

In Step With Santa Claus

KEEPING up with the Joneses is easy—it's keeping up with Santa Claus that has Sew-Your-Own in stitches currently. We got a peek at his wares, though, and frankly we copied some of his artistry. (You can see for yourself there's a "Christmas look" about today's trio of fashions.) And happily you can do more than look and wish—you can make them realities the easy way: just sew, sew, Sew-Your-Own!

Cute and Cozy.

Look your prettiest in leisure or on the job in the lusciously feminine house jacket (young sister to the house coat) above, to the left. Made in handsome silk crepe or very lightweight corduroy it is as cosy as a love seat before an open fire. Make it either in the short length (see inset) or regular dress length.

Feminine Flattery.

Polish yourself off in a brilliantly styled new frock for the holidays just ahead. Sew-Your-Own's newest success (above center) will be your success once you wear it in the public eye. It is most gifted in its distinctive design, below-waist slimmness, and all-of-a-piece simplicity. Make your version the very essence of chic in sheer wool or satin, in your most flattering color.

A Blouse or Two.

Tops in the fashion picture just now is that friendly little item—the blouse. A completely engaging one is shown here for women who sew. Wear it tucked in or peplum style. And here's a practical idea: you have a choice in sleeve lengths. For variety's sake, why not make the long sleeved model in silk crepe for dress; the short sleeved one in jersey for sports and all occasion wear?

The Patterns.

Pattern 1412 is designed for sizes 32 to 42. Size 34 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material and ½ yard for contrast. Short length requires 4¾ yards.

Pattern 1394 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42 bust). Size 16 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch fabric.

Pattern 1417 is designed for sizes 34 to 44. Size 36 requires 2½ yards of 39-inch material; with short sleeves, 1¾ yards.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Increased by Advertising

In 1869 the per unit of population value of manufactured products in America amounted to $89.60. For the year 1929 the per unit of population value of manufactured products had increased to a total of $579.70. Advertising created the demand that called for the employment of three to four times the number of workers and reduced the cost of products to consumers.

Out of Tune

"Good morning, have you had a nice rest?" the landlady asked her new lodger.

"No," was the reply, "your cat kept me awake."

"Oh," said the landlady. "I hope you are not going to ask me to have the poor thing destroyed?"

"Not exactly," said the mild little man, "but would you very much mind having it tuned?"—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Home Heating Hints By John Barclay Heating Expert

When Good Fire Won't Deliver Enough Heat, It's Economy to Call in Service Man

IT DOESN'T pay to neglect your heating plant when you know you have a good fire but the heat is below par. You run up fuel bills and make for yourself a lot of trouble and worry which could be avoided.

There are literally dozens of things that make a "sick" furnace refuse to deliver sufficient heat, and unless you are familiar with heating plants, it will pay you to call in a competent furnace man. For instance, the check damper may be placed wrong; the turn damper may be out of position; the regulator may need adjustment; there may be caked soot in the smoke-pipe or on the heating surfaces; radiators may be wrongly pitched; draft may be partially choked; a loose bolt or a rusty joint may be wasting heat.

Those are just a few of the common things that can keep a furnace from delivering enough heat. If you cannot locate the cause quickly and easily, don't take a chance on wasting fuel money. A service man will "spot" the trouble promptly and soon put your heating plant in comfortable, healthful, economical working order. Send for him immediately. WNU Service.

EASE YOUR CHILD'S CHEST COLD TONIGHT

Tonight, at bedtime, rub his little chest with stainless, snow-white Penetro. Penetro is the only salve that has a base of old-fashioned mutton suet together with 113% to 227% more medication than any other nationally sold cold salve. Creates thorough counter-irritant action that increases blood flow, stimulates body heat to ease the tightness and pressure. Vaporizing action helps to "open up" stuffy nasal passages. 35c jar contains twice 25c size. Ask for Penetro.

The Lutheran Hour

Teachings of the brute origin of mankind are dethroning God from the hearts and minds of American school children. Dr. Walter A. Maier declared last Sunday in his Lutheran Hour Broadcast.

"The use of text books designed to teach children theories which oppose the Biblical authority of Divine creation, constitutes a violation of that eminently American principle which separates church from state."

Appealing for a nation-wide protest against such teachings in publicly supported schools, Dr. Maier added that a fundamental of American religious freedom is the principle that prohibits teachers from interfering with the religious life of their pupils.

Dr. Maier laid at the door of the modern clergy the responsibility for materialistic and fatalistic attitudes toward life, asserting that some clergymen, "ignorant of the facts and blind to contradictory evidence" have discarded divine creation and endorsed the brute beginning of the human race. If man is to accept himself as merely an intelligent animal, Dr. Maier continued, the standards of morality must decline to the animal level and the ethics of the ape eventually prevail.

Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaagen

A son was born Nov. 28, in Silver Cross hospital, to Mr. and Mrs. O. Maples of Indiana. Mrs. Maples was the former Miss Eva Jean Pfaff.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koerner was baptized last Sunday by Rev. G. S. Gerhold, the name given being, Yvonne Marie. The sponsors were Mrs. Herman Weichbrodt Jr., Mr. Geo. Smith-peters. Due to illness, Mr. Smith-peters was not able to be present, so Mr. Herbert Schoop substituted. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Koerner gave a family dinner in honor of the occasion.

Albert Krusemark, Clarence Klepper and Dorothy Elser returned to Champagne to resume their studies at the University following the holidays spent in their homes here.

Christmas spirit is in the air. The Martha Sewing Circle of St. Peter's Ev. church held their annual Christmas party in the church parlors on Dec. 2. An exchange of gifts, a short program and a Christmas luncheon were the main features. Everyone enjoyed the occasion.

Many of the local people attended the Silver wedding anniversary celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Deist held at New Lenox Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Hershbach and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Woodman spent Thanksgiving with Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Hershbach in Kansas City.

The Amite Sewing Club will hold their annual Christmas party Dec. 15 in the home of Mrs. Geo. Heisner.

Mrs. Wm. Koerner will entertain her club Dec. 10.

Miss Bernice Weichbrodt and her parents are enjoying a two week's vacation touring thru the south.

Mr. Wm. C. Waugh, aged 80, who lived with his daughter, Mrs. Harold Thoma in Frankfort, died last Monday afternoon following an illness of several months.

Mr. Waugh was born in Goshen, Ind., but has lived most of his life in Steger and Crete, moving to Frankfort but five months ago. He is survived by three sons, John W., of Los Angeles, Wm. T., of St. Louis and Paul R. of Peoria; one daughter, Mrs. Thoma and seven grandchildren. His wife passed away May 2nd, 1936. IN MEMORIAM

Mark, Mrs. Elizabeth—In loving memory of our dearly beloved mother who passed away one year ago, December 6, 1936.

Loving and kind in all her ways, Upright and just to the end of her days;

Sincere and true in her heart and mind

A beautiful memory she left behind.

She had a nature you could not help loving,

A heart that was purer than gold;

And of those who knew her and loved her,

Her memory will never grow cold.

PALOS PARK

Hi Folks;

How about some personals of people caught off guard? Waste baskets and dairies are getting scarce, but don't forget I can always peep thru keyholes and get the low down on your private affairs.

There is no doubt about it, folks, Patricia Saunders likes tea, and she sits by the fire and knits, whoops, Pat! Are you sweet sixteen or otherwise? Say folks, lend an ear in Mr. Edw. Cowan's direction when he laughs, I think he laughs rather ducky. Don't get me wrong, I didn't mean 'Quack quack.'

Girl: "Can you drive with one arm?" Boy: "Sure." Girl: "O. K. have an apple."

Sniffing the aromatic fragrance of banana oil I chanced upon Ruth Walker, monochalantly applying finger nail polish. * * Each year when winter rolls around, most of us feel that urge to throw snow balls and hunt up our sleds. But most people think they are too grown up, and would rather spend the winter hugging the furnace. Even so, it seems that some girls just couldn't resist that urge any longer. They went ice skating before the ice was frozen solid enough. I'll let you guess what happened after the ice cracked.

'Tis rumored that four members of the Palos Juniors have suddenly shattered their thoughts. They think they are in love. * * Gym Teacher: "Hey Bill, did you take a shower?" Bill: "No, is one missing?" * * What prominent boy, so he thinks, wants, but isn't going to get, his name in this column? Hint; Initial: F. H.

When asked how long it takes the average high school student to get ready for school, "Two minute" Bob Tatar, up-and-coming Journalist said, "Don't you know my nickname?"

If Henrietta Baker changes her charming coiffure many more times I will be inclined to believe that, that is her hobby. * * Believe it or not, Bob Sims is training to become a second Paderewski, I caught him playing, "The Minute in G", with two fingers. * * Carl Renfro resents being called "Kitten Paws", he claims it sounds girlish. * * If any fellows wish to improve their ice skating, just get on the good side of Paul Hilbig, the fancy skater and speed demon. * * Ye Scribe has come to the decision that the twin of Robert Taylor in Palos is Donald Gibson. * * Palos Juniors will have a birthday party in the home of Betty Jane Liszt, treasurer, on Friday evening at 8 o'clock, honoring the birthday of Louise Kriz, Shirley Haack, will be initiated into the club. The initiation committee includes Pearl Zaleski, Christine Hilbig, Betty Jane Liszt and Louise Kriz. The club has ordered 25 pins for the members and any girl being voted into the club will receive a pin as part of her initiation.

The Palos Juniors, Patricia Saunders and Ethyl Pronger make up the committee.

Tis blown about since Adan Boner received his job, his hat size has increased about two sizes. * * If Sterling Falcon doesn't stop putting things in the 'Shadow' gossip column, concerning "Yours Truly", a wholesome slaughter will occur.

Louise Kuipers says policemen are like broken chairs, if you don't park right you are liable to get pinched.

Constantine Kontos has figured out that he drinks 12,512 cups of coffee each year. Whata man. * * An absent minded professor came back from lunch and when he saw his sign "Out to lunch" on the door he sat down to wait for himself.

With these choice tit-bits we close wondering who has been curling Victor Olson's hair. "THE SCRIBBLE"

Miss Mary Logeman, art instructor has formed a Handcraft club. The purpose is to interest the students in handwork.

Ten students are making small model airplanes, 7 are doing needle work for purses and pictures, while Rae Thiele and Anne Hillebrand are doing soap carving. Rae Thiele is chairman of the club and Meredith Harkinson is secretary-treasurer.

A flag pole will soon be erected at the school, 119 St., and 88 Ave., by the Palos Juniors. Patricia Saunders and Ethyl Pronger make up the committee.

The Gemini club, as the twins have recently named their newly organized club, have chosen Joseph Dickman to act as their sponsor, because he is the proud papa of twins. The club is making a survey of all neighborhood South Side high schools in an effort to arrange a twin rally in the form of a roller skating party. The officers, Ed and Al Thorenson, Gertrude and Genevieve Kunda, have sent letters to 11 Chicago high schools inquiring about twins attending.

Robt. Hopkins is the winner of the city wide Safety Poster contest, sponsored by the Safety committee. The plaque awarded to Bob, will be placed in the foyer with other Calumet awards.

Probably the principal point of interest in Algiers is the tomb of St. Geronimo, a Christian martyr of the sixteenth century, who was killed by being smothered in a block of mortar. The cast may be seen in the museum of Mustapha Superieur in the suburbs.

Congress—And The Average Citizen
By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Although Congress thus far has achieved little in its special session, the American public sees, in current indications, several rays of hope.

From various statements emanating from Washington, the average citizen is encouraged to believe that Government is beginning to think of him as the man for whom it actually exists.

Washington, for example, is giving thought to the great army of American consumers—which includes more than 129,000,000 members. Instructions have been issued to determine why the costs of food and necessities for all the people have risen so markedly in recent years.

It is giving thought to the average citizen as a worker. Efforts are being made to supplant guesswork with actual facts and figures on the numbers of jobs, and the reasons for their unemployment.

It is giving thought to him as a wage-earner. Efforts are being made, by some members of Congress, to strike the shackles from the wrists of private enterprise, and thus encourage employers to expand those productive activities on which all payrolls depend.

It is giving thought to him as a taxpayer. Efforts are being made, by some Congressmen, to cut the waste in government which has boosted public debts, public deficits and public spending to heights that take now a terrific toll from all workers, in taxes both direct and indirect.

It is giving thought to him as a citizen and constituent. Many Congressmen are now tuning in on his voice, even though it means lending a less eager ear to bureaucrats who demand huge checks, drawn on the public account, for fresh and often impractical experiments.

All these things are still promises. But, despite earlier disappointments, the American public continues to hope they will be fulfilled. If not, it's a fair guess that a lot of Congressmen are going to be asked the reason why.

THE POCKETBOOK'S LAMENT

Soil Understanding Helpful In Growing Hybrid Corn

Soil conditions are ever changing. No two seasons have field soil conditions exactly alike, although similar, and as illustrated by the varying crop yields we get from year to year from the same fields. We see therefore, that with ever changing conditions we can not apply any fixed program or practice but must arrange our field operations according to conditions and our decisions in this, if made correctly, require understanding. Many factors enter into this understanding and one of the ways to get it is to study and think out the soil changes as they occur.

This present fall presents a quite unusual soil condition in this region. Abnormally low rainfall and not enough at any time to bring about leaching and permanent loss of the plant nutrients that have been concentrated in the surface soil during the recent drouth years. The following of the drouth years one so closely upon another without intervening leaching is an unusual factor which those now living may never see again. With long periods of drouth we have long uprisings soil capillary moisture to the surface, bringing back to the surface the plant food that had been leached down into the sub soil but not completely leached away. With drouth we often do not have enough water for plants to use these plant nutrients and they remain in the surface soil until either later removed by growing plants, when moisture is sufficient, or leached out on heavy rainfall, particularly during non-growing season such as late fall and spring or even in winter when there is no protection frost crust. Each year with corn fields where there is no weed growth we have these lesser accumulations of plant nutrients following pollinating of the corn which marks the close of the vegetative period and no further plant food is absorbed.

We recall the drouth of '34 the practical absence of frost crust in the winter of '34-'35 as well as no deep leaching rainfall. Consequently in '35 with these plant food concentrates still in the surface zone and the continuously intermittent rainfall of that year we had an unusual corn crop yield. '36 was another dry year and '37 we have experienced a corn yield up to the limit of rainfall which came at favorable times and we have an above normal corn crop.

With the dry weather of the fall and the absence of leaching rains, we still have in these corn fields unusual concentrates of plant food, particularly nitrates, and which nitrates are the easiest lost by leaching and will be lost, if not salvaged, should leaching rains occur when there is no frost crust or during the spring months. The question may be asked, Can these be saved for future use? and the answer is: Yes, if we have the materials within the soil to enable certain types of soil bacteria to transform these nitrates into humus, which is of itself insoluble in soil waters and hence not lost by leaching.

In fields where we have growing plants these plants absorb this plant food and hold it in the form of plant substance but in corn fields particularly where there is no vegetative growth such as weeds, we can by thoroughly disking the cornstalks into the soil provide a source of carbon in the cellulose and lignum fiber of the corn stalks that enable bacteria to transfer these plant nutrients particularly nitrates, into humus coatings around the soil just the same as the stick under the manure pile becomes quickly coated with this black material. This brings us to the question, What is soil humus? and one answer can be, It is a black colloidal jel produced largely by certain types of soil bacteria within the areated zone of the soil and coated around most of the soil particles. During growing periods plant food largely comes from the breakdown of this same black substance that other soil bacteria bring about and hence we now see that we have two types of soil bacteria those that put humus on the soil particle and those that take it off. We do not have to point out that black soils which is nothing more than humus coated mineral soil particles, are much more productive than the light colored and non-humus coated soils.

As we grow our corn and other crops by the breaking down of this soil humus coating we should also plan to replace it following the cessation of the vegetative period of each plant, which is with corn following pollen fertilization. We can thus restore much of the removed humus coating and even more for future crop production. The question then comes up, What are the conditions needed so that soil bacteria can make humus? The answer is three essentials: Carbon, which we have in the cellulose crop residues such as straw, cornstalks, and the like, nitrogen in the form of soil nitrates and phosphorus to balance. The absence of any one of these defeats the end. Where we have these materials present, soil bacteria will quickly transform them into humus, particularly in the suitable temperatures of summer in drouth periods are unfavorable for humus production. Cool, moist periods in fall and spring are most favorable, particularly fall.

What are the proportions of these needed materials? If you have not heart already, you will frequently in the future hear of the carbon-nitrogen ratio and in this region of 12 to 1, meaning that the soil bacteria need carbon in the proportion of 12 parts of carbon to 1 of nitrogen and phosphorus to balance. In ordinary stalk residues we can figure that carbon constitutes about 1-5 of the weight of the cellulose portions, are the husks, leaves and the upper part of the corn plant as well as 1-5 of the common small grain straws. The cellulose of any of these plant residues is quite suitable. In the woody fiber of plants, lignum, the percentage is somewhat greater but considerably less available. Cellulose is the desired form and which we have largely in straw and cornstalk residues. This cellulose supplies the energy to the bacteria and in their humus production work just like cellulose and grain together supply the energy to the animals we use in doing our field work. The cellulose of the standing cornstalk above the ground is not available to the bacteria within the soil nor if we bury the stalk as in plowing is it available to more than a small portion of the soil bacteria as bacteria are immobile and do not move from place to place. In order to reach the greatest number of these bacteria with cellulose fiber we mince up the stalks by disking and incorporate these throughout the soil root zone. We should have in mind that all three of the substances, cellulose, nitrates and phosphorus are essential as well as the presence of soil bacteria, and the absence of any one of them means no humus, and their loss by leaching if heavy rains occur before subsequent plant growth. Cellulose by itself on rotting volatilizes into gas as illustrated in the strawstack or the heavy furrow slice sandwich.

This past fall we have had a dry surface soil condition which favored the disking in of the stalks which would enable the soil fungi and bacteria to break down the cellulose and fabricate the nitrates into humus coatings and thus save for the future as distinguished from losing the soil nitrates that have been brought up from lower soil zones through long periods between rainfall and recently concentrated in our surface soils. Not every fall offers this opportunity; in fact very few of them equal to this, when climatic soil conditions and the materials for the processes were all as favorable including the presence of phosphorus, particularly in the form of rock phosphate.

Many of the people when viewing the Thomson Hybrid Seed Fields along the Lincoln Highway during the past summer would ask what kind of fertilizer had been applied being of the opinion that that growth of corn was only possible on the land through the addition of fertilizer. This growth of corn, however, simply represented in part the carrying forward of soil nitrates that had been concentrated in the soil surface in '34 and were added to through the absence of frost crust the following winter as well as escaped deep leaching rains in '35. Consequently these were still in the soil surface in '35 when all the straw of the wheat crop that was grown that year was returned to the soil as well as clipping back of the subsequent weed growth supplying the cellulose carbon that enabled the soil bacteria to transform that unusual accumulation of soil nitrates into soil humus. This cellulose addition made possible carrying forward to 1937 an unusual supply of plant food when it could be most beneficially utilized in growing corn. The heavy cornstalk growth of the 1937 hybrid seed fields has the past month been disking in to salvage the fall unleached nitrate accumulation for future crop use. We see therefore, that this sort of soil planning requires our ability to recognize conditions that enable us to do the things that may work toward soil building and to have in advance in the soil those substances present such as phosphorus supply that we might not be able to add when the other conditions of humus production might occur. Farming will always be a procedure based on understanding that enables us to adapt our work and programs to ever changing conditions. Consequently we see the need of ever striving for understanding of that one substance on the earth's surface that is by far the highest benefit and use to mankind, the soil.

Trapped in her burning home near Oconee, Mrs. Maud E. Kulper, fifty-four, was burned to death. Her husband, Ben Kulper, was seriously burned in an attempt to rescue her.

Byron Poe, twenty-six years old, of Woodstock, was shot to death while hunting pheasants on the farm of John E. Sheridan, east of Woodstock. He tripped and fell against the shotgun of a companion.

Burglars burned open a large safe in the postoffice at Dwight and took stamps valued by Postmaster J. E. Garrett at $15,000. Garrett said they overlooked a smaller safe containing $1,100 in cash.

Emory Commander, twenty years old, who claims to be a member of a prominent Montgomery (Ala.) family, was held under $5,000 bond in Peoria on a charge of passing worthless checks.

Phyllis Woolsey, thirty-three, of Knoxville, was arrested in Galesburg on a cattle rustling charge. Sheriff Elgin Ross said he confessed and implicated Harley Elker, thirty-nine, of Galesburg, as his accomplice.

The resignation of John W. Alvord, Chicago, an engineer of national repute, from the state board of natural resources and conservation, was announced by John J. Hallahan, director of the state board of registration and education.

Mrs. Ellen Berry, ninety-four years old, born in Galena and who resided in or within five miles of the city all her life, is dead. She was Galena's oldest citizen. She left two sons, John and Thomas of Galena.

The Illinois commerce commission authorized the New York Central railroad to remove its station building at Texas City, Saline county, and to withdraw its station agent and remove its station building at Cowling, Wabash county.

Illinois farmers reaped a larger corn crop this year than ever has been recorded in the state. A. J. Surratt, joint statistician for the state and federal departments of agriculture, said in a crop report. Corn production was placed by Surratt at 434,746,000 bushels, almost double the 1936 crop of 217,751,000 bushels and 98,000,000 bushels above the five-year (1928-1932) average of 336,378,000 bushels.

Third and fourth places went to two Alton boys, Lynn Andrews, 336.45 pounds, and Earl Buchanan, 305.31 pounds.

"Peoria will be 'busted' by January 1," Controller Frank Brunaing declared in reviewing the city's financial condition with Mayor David McClugage and his councilmen. "Most of the departments included in the corporate fund figures," he said, "have reached the end of their income now. Only the fact that water and light bills, included in the original appropriation, have been paid by a $300,000 bond issue saves the city from presenting a heavy unpaid balance at the close of the year."

Contented Holsteins now placidly chew their cud while being milked to strains of sweet music as produced by a radio installed in a dairy barn by Sherman Stetson, a farmer near Neponset. The milk flow has not been noticeably increased by the music, but the milkers like it.

Work on the improvement of Peoria's municipal airport has started. Federal officials and engineers are co-operating with the Peoria park board in its efforts to construct one of the finest airports in the Midwest and to get Peoria back on the air mail map.

JUMPER THE HARE CONSULTS
BUSTER BEAR

JUMPER THE HARE was sitting under a low growing hemlock tree deep in the Green Forest, where he could look out over the pond of Paddy the Beaver. Jumper was not feeling at all good that morning. No, sir; Jumper was feeling anything but good. In the first place, it was a long time since he had had a real good sleep. In the second place, he couldn't rest easily a minute even with his eyes wide open. All the time he felt as if his heart might jump right up in his throat any minute. And it was all because Reddy Fox had set out to catch him, and gave him no peace night or day.

"Old Mother Nature certainly takes better care of some than she does of others," thought Jumper, just a wee bit bitterly, as he watched Paddy the Beaver swimming about in his pond. "Now, there is Paddy, perfectly safe out there in the water, and here am I, not safe anywhere. It isn't fair. It certainly isn't fair."

Then Jumper looked and listened anxiously for the least sign of Reddy Fox. But all was quiet, and once more he began to think about the unfairness of Old Mother Nature. Now, that isn't a bit like Jumper the Hare. Jumper is almost as happy-go-lucky as Peter Rabbit, and takes things just as they come. It wasn't long before he began to feel a little ashamed of himself for having such thoughts. He thought of those long legs Old Mother Nature had given him to take him quickly out of danger, and then he remembered how Paddy the Beaver has to get his food on shore, or most of it anyway, and how slow and clumsy Paddy is out of the water. The more he thought of this the more ashamed he grew of the thoughts he had had of Old Mother Nature's seeming unfairness and pretty soon he knew right down in his heart that he wouldn't change places with Paddy the Beaver if he could, not even to get rid of Reddy Fox.

He was still thinking of this when a stick snapped a little way from him and his heart gave a great, frightened thump. You see, he had grown so anxious and nervous that whenever he heard a stick snap or a leaf rustle he was sure it was Reddy Fox trying to steal up on him. Jumper held his breath and looked in the direction from which the sound had come. There, shuffling along and muttering to himself, was Buster Bear. Jumper grinned. It was a very great relief to see Buster Bear instead of Reddy Fox. You see, Jumper isn't the least bit afraid of Buster, because he knows he can keep out of his way. Buster knows it, too, and so he wastes no time trying to catch Jumper.

Jumper hopped out and sat up in front of Buster Bear. Buster sat up, too. Very funny they looked as they faced each other, one so very big and one so small, and both sitting up in just the same way. Paddy the Beaver had to laugh as he looked across at them.

"Hello, Buster!" said Jumper. "How do you like the Green Forest?"

Buster's little eyes twinkled as he grinned down at Jumper. "Pretty well, Jumper; pretty well, so far. Seems to me you are looking thin. Yes, sir, you are looking thin. That ought not to be in the beautiful springtime in such a nice place as the Green Forest." Buster shook his head as if he didn't understand it at all.

"It's all your fault!" cried Jumper.

Buster Bear looked puzzled. "How is it my fault?" he demanded.

Then Jumper told him the whole story, how he had been sent to invite Buster to meet the other little people of the Green Forest, how Reddy Fox had tried to catch him, and then had been terribly frightened by the sudden appearance of Buster and had run, and then how he (Jumper) had run after him just for fun, and how all the little people were making fun of Reddy now, so that he was spending all his time trying to catch Jumper so as to get even. Buster's eyes twinkled more than ever as he listened.

"Perhaps I can help you," said he.

"Oh, will you? That would be perfectly splendid!" cried Jumper.

SEASON IS HERE FOR MINCE PIES

Pumpkin Pie Also Really Belongs to This Time.

By EDITH M. BARBER

EVEN the most modern of us have a few old-fashioned prejudices, and I admit to mine! Glad as I am to have most foods ignore local seasons, there are certain dishes that I, for one, am glad are usually reserved for certain months of the year. Mince pie is an outstanding example of a dessert which belongs with cold weather. While pumpkin pie might well be served at any time of year, it still belongs among our cold weather desserts by custom whether it is of the old-fashioned custard type or that even more delicate chiffon pie.

In a bygone day the making of mince meat in the early fall was just as common as fall pickling and preserving. Today, most of us are content to buy one of the ready-to-use mixes which, however, we may like to make individual through the addition of candied cherries, nuts, bits of left-over canned fruit, with brandy or some other liquor for special flavor accent. It is a good idea to keep a covered jar in the refrigerator which may be gradually filled with any fruit or juice which remains after cherries, apricots, pineapple or other fruits have been served for dessert. This jar can be called upon to add additional flavor when the mince pie is in the making.

Pastry for mince pie should be good and rich. By the way, have you seen the gorgeous chromium rolling pins which can be filled with ice? The metal and the ice between them make it possible to roll rich pastry easily.

By the way, I had a pie which was new to me not long ago at a dinner party. Have you tasted egg nog pie, flavored as the name shows with rum?

Mince Meat.

- 1 pound lean beef
- ½ pound suet
- 3 large tart apples
- 1½ ounces citron
- 2 pounds raisins
- 1 pound currants
- ½ tablespoon cinnamon
- ½ tablespoon mace
- ¾ teaspoon cloves
- ¾ teaspoon allspice
- ½ tablespoon salt
- 1 pound brown sugar
- 1 quart cider

Cover meat with boiling water and simmer until tender. Cut suet in small pieces and let stand in cold water 1 hour. Drain. Grind meat suet, apples and citron in the meat chopper. Add raisins, currants and spices mixed with the sugar. Add cider and cook slowly 2 hours, stirring frequently to prevent burning. Seal in hot, air-tight jars. When ready to make pies, add more chopped apples, water, cider or brandy.

This recipe makes seven pints mince meat.

Pumpkin Chiffon Pie.

- 3 egg yolks
- ½ cup sugar
- 1½ cups canned pumpkins
- ½ cup milk
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ginger
- ½ teaspoon nutmeg
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- 1 tablespoon granulated gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 3 egg whites, stiffly beaten
- ½ cup sugar

Mix egg yolks, sugar, pumpkin, milk, salt and spices and cook over hot water until of custard consistency, stirring constantly. Soak gelatin in cold water 5 minutes. Add to the hot pumpkin mixture and stir until dissolved. Cool and when mixture starts to congeal, fold in beaten egg whites and sugar. Pour into baked pastry shell and chill in the refrigerator until set. Garnish with whipped cream before serving.

Chess Tarts.

- 1 cup brown sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1 tablespoon melted butter
- ¼ cup milk
- ½ teaspoon vanilla extract
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- ½ teaspoon cloves
- ¾ cup walnut meats
- ½ cup currants

Pastry
Beat sugar and eggs together and add the melted butter. Mix thoroughly. Add remaining ingredients and fill small tart pans which have been lined with pastry. Bake in a moderate oven, 347 degrees Fahrenheit, for half an hour.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

By Roger B. Whitman

HOT WATER COIL IN A FIRE BOX

WITH hot-air furnaces, and often with house heating boilers, it is very common to obtain running hot water through a coil or similar arrangement in the fire box. There are several reasons why this does not work out. For one thing, the water in the heating coil absorbs heat so quickly that the nearby part of the fire is deadened. The fire then burns unevenly, with a bad effect on the heating of the house. One of my correspondents writes to me of his experience in this connection. He had used a fire box coil for seven years, with poor luck, for several had burned out. On complaining to the maker of the heater, he was advised to substitute a separate coal burning stove for water heating. He writes:

"I followed the advice, and shall never regret it. In the last hard winter, I heated the house with two tons less of furnace coal, which I attribute entirely to the removal of the water heating coil from the furnace. I burn small coal in my water heating stove, but at less cost and in less quantity. I find it much easier to keep my furnace at house-heating efficiency. The house has been comfortable all winter; warmer than any of my neighbors', and with less fuel consumption. The theory of the furnace maker seems proven. It takes so many heat units to heat a house, and so many to heat hot water. If you use some of the heat units in the furnace for water, they are not being used for the house. The fire gets lopsided; hot on one side and cool on the other, greatly decreasing the efficiency."

That theory is entirely sound. A furnace is supposed to be of the proper size for a particular house, and if some of the heat produced in it is taken away from house heating to use for heating water, there is less left for the real purpose.

There is another reason against the use of a fire box coil. The water cannot be prevented from overheating; as a result, steam is formed, and the water may be discolored by the throwing down of sediment. Steam in the hot water pipes causes unpleasant rumbling noises. What is more serious, there is a possibility that the excess pressure may burst the hot water tank. This is so common that plumbing and heating ordinances usually require that such systems be provided with an automatic relief valve to blow off steam.

A water-heating stove should be of such size and so arranged that the fire will need attention but once a day. In addition, it should be provided with a damper regulator that will shut off the draft when the water reaches the desired temperature—usually 140 degrees. This is plenty hot enough for all household uses, while at the same time it is too low a temperature to produce much, if any, sediment.

SOME people would ask you how you were if they happened to pass by when you were drowning.

"Hi, there. How are you?" they'd say, with a broad grin and a cheery wave of the hand. "I'm drowning," you'd answer. And ten to one (wanna bet?) they'd answer, "That's fine." They always do.

Personally, we think the question, "How are you?" should be reserved for hospital and convalescent cases. But for tea parties and casual meetings on the street a much better leading question is, "How much are avocados today?" or "Have you seen the new hats?" Something chatty, you know, that won't get you into a discussion of measles symptoms. Of course, you can leave out the leading question altogether. "Hello" is quite enough, and if no conversation comes naturally it may be followed after a tactful interval by "good-by."

"Hi, There. How Are You?"

But if you have friends who persist in the how-are-you habit, work up some surprise answers for them. "Yes, the weather's lovely today." "I give up. How am I?" "Broke and hungry." The last is the best. It may get you a meal or something.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—"The best laid plans of mice and men" will go off at a tangent, it seems, even when one political party is numerically in supreme control of the national government.

Congress Is Balky
President Roosevelt called congress into extra session with very definite objectives outlined, and he repeated them in his regular message on the state of the Union. He wanted crop control legislation for relief of agriculture and he wanted wages and hours controlled by federal statute for the relief of labor. But congress, or a part of it, has turned out to be a balky mule. It has one foot out of the traces already and the driver is having a lot of trouble to keep the animal hitched.

The above is by way of saying that scores of Democratic members of the house and many senators with seats on the majority side have come back from a summer on the hustings quite convinced that it is not popular with the voters to be a rubber stamp. I do not mean by that statement that the President has lost control of his party machinery, or that he can not crack the whip and get things done; I mean that instead of having a few recalcitrants within his own party to deal with, he now has many, and members of congress are about like coyotes—their courage increases as their number increases.

It might be mentioned in passing that at least half a dozen Democratic members of the house have come back from home with plans to run for their party's nomination to the senate next year. The reason given by those with whom I have talked is almost the same in each instance. The incumbent senator who is up for re-election has been too much of a New Dealer. "Our people are calling for something besides rubber stamps." These potential senatorial candidates have records showing opposition to the President in some vitally important New Deal policies while supporting him wholeheartedly in other phases of his program.

No one can say how far this movement will get, but anyone who has observed congresses perform in other cases where the President was in his second term can not dismiss the circumstance as without significance. It is the usual practice for sitting members of the house and senate to stick close to the President, as party leader, in his first term—because they must seek re-election with his support. But now many of them regard President Roosevelt as through and they are starting early to make their record look good to the voters whom they will canvass next year.

These few paragraphs above must serve to introduce evidence of a much deeper fact. In many important places and among many powerful or influential men in congress one hears frequent references and observations to this effect: If Mr. Roosevelt is going to retain his control of the party and carry through on the propositions which he will make from time to time, he must cast aside a part, at least, of his radical advisers and the schemes they concoct.

As I related, the President outlined his objectives for the special session. Two or three years ago, they would have been received by the representatives and senators with loud acclaim, with ballyhoo. But in the first few weeks of the extra session, there has been just as much condemnation as there has been approval.

Nor can we overlook another phase of the situation. Not only have many of the men at the capitol declined to affirm the President's propositions; they have gone in the other direction. They have offered programs of their own. They are prepared to battle for them. In politics, that sort of a thing often has proved fatal to the plans of the man who then occupied the White House. It may not turn out that way this time but there are many observers are sure the President is going to be forced into accepting some things he did not want or does not want just now.

Take the question of taxes, for instance. Rightly or wrongly, the President is being blamed for the current business depression and criticism of this sort is rolling up like a snowball going down hill. It is being said that two tax levies which were forced through congress are largely responsible. The tax on undivided profits of corporations and the capital gains tax are used as horrible examples of these unsound policies fostered by Mr. Roosevelt. Well, the President is responsible to the extent that he approved of them. They were the product, however, of some of the dozen or so peek-a-boo artists to whom the President frequently has listened as advisors.

I think it has been generally demonstrated that the two taxes in question have been ruinous, especially to the small business. It is equally true, I believe, that business must be given some consideration if it ever is to get on a sound basis again and that it ought to share attention of legislators with labor leaders even though business has fewer votes. In any event, the burdens which the New Deal admittedly has placed on business are serving as the springboard for a part of the Democratic majority. They can properly fight for these things—and easily be too busy to push the President's program through.

So the President's plans have gone astray. They may remain that way, or they may go even further, depending upon how long the backward slide of business continues. Of one thing, you may be sure. Partly through his own fault and partly through the fault of the type of advisors with which he has surrounded himself, Mr. Roosevelt does not have the confidence of as many members of the legislative branch as he formerly held.

It is a little early to attempt a report on prospects for the regular session of congress that convenes in January. Yet, since it is quite evident there will be nothing in the current extra session beyond crop control legislation—if even that—I believe we might look forward a bit. One of the things now evident is the position congress will take on relief for destitute and unemployed. I believe I see a battle coming in that direction.

It has been apparent during the last two years that congress was dissatisfied with the relief system built up by Secretary Ickes and the professional reliever, Harry Hopkins, works progress administrator. The requirements, especially for the Hopkins machine, have been met with what has come to be called "blank check" appropriations. That is, congress has passed a bill appropriating two billions or three billions or whatever was thought necessary by Mr. Hopkins. It was just as simple as that. Congress had no strings on the money, seldom was told a great deal of the details. It was money to feed and clothe the destitute.

Now, however, some observers think they detect a change. They believe they see signs that congress will put an end to the "blank check" method of handling relief. As far as anyone knows now, the President again will ask for a huge sum to be distributed for relief through Mr. Hopkins—and that is when the battle lines will form.

Congress, therefore, will be faced again with appropriation demands to provide food and clothing and likely the request for the funds will come from Mr. Roosevelt as heretofore—for a lump sum. If the number favoring the dole grows to any considerable extent, there may be a reversal of policy whether the President wants it that way or not.

You see, in an election year (and all house members and 30-odd senators face election canvasses again next year) it is nice to be able to say to the voters that they are receiving something at the hands of their representative or their senator. The candidates can justify a break with the President easily, and with business sliding backward as is the case now, there will be plenty of relief needed for unemployed again. The voters can be told that they are being given charge of these relief expenditures and that they no longer will have to watch Washington bureaucrats waste the taxpayers' money. On the horizon, therefore, it is possible to see the line of cleavage between the New Deal and the old line Democrats leading to elimination of the dangerous lump-sum appropriation and a restoration of relief ministrations into the hands of local authorities.

There is one further consideration in the general relief situation that attracts attention. I think it is reasonable to assume that the far-flung relief machine which Mr. Hopkins has built up is permeated to the core with political appointments. It is only the usual political procedure and is not confined to the present national administration. Assuming, therefore, that there is such a political machine, it is hardly open to question that it is a Roosevelt machine. The picture then becomes clear: since numerous members of the house and senate want to control their own political destinies, they want control of the organizations for relief in their own jurisdictions. Further, if Mr. Roosevelt should want to seek a third term nomination, those Democrats who want to oppose him would be quite powerless if they had to sit idly by and witness Roosevelt delegates picked from their own stronghold.

Lesson for December 5

CHRISTIAN REST

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 11:28-30; Hebrews 4:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matthew 11:28.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When We Are Tired.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Great Invitation.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Christ Gives Us Rest.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Rest.
"Time, like an ever-rolling stream, bears all its sons away," so sang Isaac Watts in 1719. One wonders what he might say today! The mad rush of modern life—its relentless drawing of us all into its terrific tempo—leaves us distraught, nervous, overanxious. Nervous disorders are on a rapid increase, even among children. The condition prevails in the country as well as in the city, although it is aggravated in metropolitan centers.

Let us lay down the burdens of the universe for a bit and counsel quietly about that almost forgotten Christian virtue, rest. Nowhere can the troubled spirit find calm of soul as surely and as quickly as in God's Word—and in the One revealed there, for true rest is

I. Found in Christ (Matt. 11:28-30).

Rest for our souls is found not in the cessation of activity, but rather in joining with Christ as our yoke-fellow and in going on with him in meekness and lowliness of heart. Most of life's restlessness is the result of pride, of driving ambition to be somebody or to attain something. True humility removes all such disturbing factors.

But we do have a yoke and a burden to bear. Yes, it is true that not all is easy in the Christian life. But as someone has suggested, the burdens are like the burden of feathers on a bird. They may seem to be too heavy for his little body, but as a matter of fact they are the things he flies with! Such are the "burdens" of Christ.

II. Received by Faith (Heb. 4:3). Those who believe enter into rest. Faith in God through Jesus Christ brings a man into an abiding place that the storms of life may beat upon but can never move. Fair weather followers of Jesus who fall into a frenzy of fear and worry when sorrow or loss comes upon them need to learn to walk by faith. "Be not dismayed whate'er betide, God will take care of you," is more than the pious expression of a hymn writer, it is a statement of fact.

III. Rejected by Unbelief (Heb. 4:1, 6-11).

"The worst thing in the world" is unbelief—because it effectually closes the door to God's blessing. Jesus could not do "many mighty works" in his home town of Nazareth "because of their unbelief" (Matt. 13:58). Unbelief will keep us from the rest that God has prepared for his people, for it not only hinders men from coming to the Saviour, but keeps them from resting in him after they are saved.

IV. Necessary to Useful Living (v. 11).

Only when the follower of Christ appropriates that rest of soul which results from turning from his own efforts and trusting himself fully to Christ will there be that absolute surrender of every detail and problem of life to him which will bring out in daily living the glorious beauty and power of a life at rest with God.

A poem by Fay Inchfawn which has blessed the writer's soul is here passed on, with the prayer that it may help you who read these notes:

"Well, I am done. My nerves were on the rack.
I've laid them down today;
It was the last straw broke the camel's back.
I've laid that down today.
No, I'll not fuss, nor fuss, nor fight;
I'll walk by faith a bit and not by sight,
I think the universe will work all right,
I've laid it down today.

"So, here and now, the overweight, the worry,
I'll lay it down today:
The all-too-anxious heart; the tearing hurry;
O eager hands, O feet so prone to run,
I think that He who made the stars and sun
Can mind the things you've had to leave undone.
Do lay them down today."

How true it is that we are prone to bear all the burdens of the universe when God's Word has told us to cast all our care upon Him, for He careth for us (I Pet. 5:7). It is a powerful testimony for Christ when distraught and worry-ridden non-Christians see God's children walking steady and true in the midst of disappointments, trials, and sorrows. And the opposite is also true, that failure to trust God is a practical denial of our professed faith.

Historic Hoaxes

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Clan War

ONE day a Scotchman of the Clan MacLean dropped in to the office of the Toronto Mail and Empire, as was his custom, to see his friend, Charles Langton Clarke. On the newspaper man's desk he noticed a clipping of an article which quoted "the noted Scottish historian, Strangway," as saying that the MacLeans had been the first to flee from the Battle of Culloden, thus shattering the hopes of Bonnie Prince Charlie for regaining the British throne. That clipping had been "planted" there deliberately by Clarke, who expected his friend to find it and immediately "blow up."

Instead, the victim of Clarke's hoax rushed from the office and sat himself down to write an indignant letter to another Toronto newspaper. Immediately other Scots in Ontario took up the matter. To the MacLeans, proudest of all the proud Highlanders and numerous in Canada, such a reflection upon the courage of their ancestors was an insufferable insult and they were loud in their denunciation of this historian, Strangway.

Members of other clans—and these included men who were supposed to be authorities on Scottish history—declared that they were quite familiar with the works of this historian and had always found him accurate. For days the battle of Culloden was fought over and over again in the columns of the newspapers. So bitter grew the feeling that Clarke began to wonder how he could still the tempest that he had raised, before there was bloodshed. Then almost as suddenly as it had begun, the controversy died down. But it wasn't until years later that Clarke dared confess that he was the author of the hoax which had so aroused the Scottish clansmen.

"The Animals Are Loose!"

ON SUNDAY morning, November 9, 1874, a shiver of fear ran through New York City. Headlines in the New York Herald proclaimed that all of the animals in the Central Park zoo had escaped. The story, which ran to five full columns, said that 49 persons were dead, of whom 27 were identified, (their names were printed) and 200 were injured, 60 of them seriously.

The mayor had issued a warning for everybody to stay at home while brave citizens, including Chester A. Arthur, Samuel J. Tilden and other notables, who had killed most of the ravening beasts, rounded up the 12 animals still at large. James Gordon Bennett, owner of the Herald, collapsed in his bed while reading the story and stayed there all day. Other citizens also stayed at home, thereby cutting down church attendance. Those who did venture out went heavily armed.

For several hours the city was in an uproar. Then somebody happened to read the last paragraph of the story. It was headed "The Moral of the Whole" and revealed that this was a gigantic hoax, the story of what MIGHT happen if better and stronger cages weren't provided for the animals in the zoo.

In fact, that was what Thomas B. Connery, the managing editor of the Herald, who ordered the story written, had hoped to accomplish with it. But he overshot the mark badly. He gave the whole city the jitters but the zoo didn't get stronger cages for its animals, at least, not until long after the excitement over his hoax had died down.

"Christ's Letter"

THE next time you receive a copy of a letter, which is said to have been written by Jesus Christ just before the Crucifixion, don't be afraid to disregard the warning that "misfortune and ill luck will follow you" unless you pass it on to somebody else. For this is one of the most famous of all hoaxes.

So far as it is possible to determine, this letter was written by some unknown person—perhaps a religious fanatic—around 1891 and it has been industriously circulated ever since. "The whole thing is a stupid, clumsy hoax or a modern frame-up" says an authority on the subject. "It is even inconsistent with the teachings of the Bible and is expressed in modern English—sure proof that it is a fake."

The instructions for passing along this letter vary. Sometimes you are requested to make four copies and send them to four of your friends who will send copies to four of their friends and so on. Sometimes the number is seven and sometimes nine. But in any case the receiver is solemnly warned not to "break the chain."

A more modern variation on this hoax is a letter which, it is asserted, was "written by a dying soldier in France." In either case, refusal to do as requested will "bring you bad luck" and willingness to do it will "bring you good luck." Perhaps it will—and it also helps the United States post office department. It will sell just that many more stamps!

Thumbtack Your Draperies to a Board.

TO GIVE draperies the smartly tailored effect obtained by the professional decorator, a valance board must be used. A straight one by two inch board will be needed. A small finishing nail in the top of the window casing near each end and screw eyes placed near the top of the back of the valance board will hold it in place as shown at A. Both side drapes and valance may be thumbtacked to the board and then be quickly hung all at once by hooking the screw eyes over the finishing nails. Think of the advantage on cleaning day! Just lift board and all off the nails and take outside for dusting.

Tack the side drapes to the board first as at B, arranging full-
